Dowse Your Microbiome and Heavy Metals!
with Susan Collins

There are more nonhuman cells in your gut microbiome than there are human cells in your body. We live in a symbiotic relationship with our gut. We need it to live, it needs us to live. Wait! What is living in our gut that isn't us? We host a lot of creatures, including bacteria, viruses, fungi, single cell organisms and critters that could be called parasites if they weren't essential for our health. In the best of all possible worlds, we and they are in perfect balance and everyone is healthy. As it is, about 90% of diseases arise from an unhealthy gut microbiome.

And what about heavy metals? Are they all bad? Or are some of them absolutely essential for our health? Join us as we dowse new ways to improve our health.
